BOSTON COMMON

The Boston Common is the oldest city park in America, established all the way back in 1640. For today's Bostonians, it's a popular spot for all your standard park activities (relaxing, eating lunch, throwing a frisbee), but since its establishment, the Common has been used for all kinds of things. It was used as a military camp by the British before the Revolutionary War, and in the early 1700s, it was the site of many public hangings. At various times it has also been used as a mass protest site, a place to welcome visiting dignitaries, and a cow pasture. Cows were banned in 1830, so remember to leave your cow at home.

TIMES SQUARE

In 1904 the New York Times building opened up here, and they had a fireworks show for the New Year. Unfortunately, the fireworks almost lit another building on fire, so a few years later they decided to drop a ball instead (this was an old Navy time signaling system). That, of course, is what we still do today on New Year's in Times Square, only now it's in front of a million people.

ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY

The Changing of the Guard is mind-blowing for the kids. As the soldiers walk the plaza overlooking the cemetery, what they're doing is saying thank you to the 400,000 people that are buried there and to every soldier that's ever fought for our country. The guards take it with the utmost seriousness, and the kids are amazed.
