EYE OF THE TIGER

Every time we go to Philadelphia, we do the “Rocky Steps,” which is the huge staircase at the end of the Ben Franklin Parkway that leads up to the Philadelphia Museum of Art. It’s a lot of fun, it’s hilarious. In the movie they use the steps to represent Rocky’s accomplishment of kicking himself into shape. So I play the Rocky music on the bus ride, and when we get there the kids race up the steps. You reach the top of the stairs, and you look out and see William Penn on horseback and the skyline of Philadelphia. It’s an absolutely beautiful sight, and the kids love it.

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING

Built in only 410 days, the Empire State Building was the world’s tallest building for 40 years and is still one of New York City’s most popular and recognizable landmarks. Its 1930s art deco spire can be easily spotted from anywhere, but you may not know that the spire was originally supposed to be a docking station for zeppelins!

CENTRAL PARK

Central Park is not your ordinary city park. It is 843 acres of trees, paths, man-made lakes, bridges, woods, and, of course, people. The park was designed in the mid-1800s by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux for a design competition to create a large green space in the middle of Manhattan where the people could relax, unwind, and get back in touch with nature, even if just for an afternoon. These days, when the sun is shining, New Yorkers and tourists flock to Central Park to picnic, skate, stroll, toss frisbees, paddle the lake, or just relax and watch the people go by.
