STAR POWER

The kids love Hollywood. They love the Walk of Fame, seeing all the stars on the sidewalk, Mann's Chinese theater. The last time I was there they were filming a cable reality show, which was really cool to see. And every once in a while a movie star comes up and there's paparazzi all around. It's always fun when that happens.

GRIFFITH OBSERVATORY

Perched high up in the Hollywood Hills, the Griffith Observatory is part astronomy museum, part scenic lookout, and part movie location (a famous scene from Rebel Without a Cause was filmed here—hence the James Dean statue outside). The observatory houses more than 60 space-themed exhibits, two large telescopes, and a planetarium, but many visitors come up here for the spectacular views of the Hollywood Sign and the endless Los Angeles sprawl that stretches all the way to the Pacific Ocean.
