TIMES SQUARE

In 1904, the New York Times building opened up here, and they had a fireworks show for the New Year. Unfortunately the fireworks almost lit another building on fire, so a few years later they decided to drop a ball instead (this was an old Navy time signaling system). That, of course, is what we still do today on New Year's in Times Square, only now it's in front of a million people.

ON BROADWAY

“The Broadway theaters we go to are historical. This isn’t your local performing arts center or even your metropolitan performing arts center with thousands of seats. These theaters date from one hundred years ago. The seats are smaller, because the people were smaller back then. Even the stages are tiny. When you’re there, you see the world’s most talented performers doing a kind of theater that’s native to America. Musicals are meant to be accessible, so they sing in English, in a way that you can hear the words. It’s not like opera and it’s not like a regular play—it’s a sort of hybrid, and it has a style all its own.”

— Mitch B., Tour Director

CENTRAL PARK

Central Park is not your ordinary city park. It is 843 acres of trees, paths, man-made lakes, bridges, woods, and, of course, people. The park was designed in the mid-1800s by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux for a design competition to create a large green space in the middle of Manhattan where people could relax, unwind, and get back in touch with nature, even if just for an afternoon. These days, when the sun is shining, New Yorkers and tourists flock to Central Park to picnic, skate, stroll, toss frisbees, paddle the lake, or just simply relax and watch the people go by.
