RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL

New York's world-famous Art Deco theater opened in 1932, with an elaborate stage show featuring Ray Bolger, Doc Rockwell, and Martha Graham. In the decades since, it has hosted unforgettable performances by many of the all-time greats, from the legendary Rockettes at the annual Christmas Spectacular, to countless concerts, network TV specials, film premieres, and award shows. It's not just the performers onstage that are a sight to behold at Radio City—the theater itself is a visual masterpiece of 60-foot-high gold-leaf ceilings, 30-foot chandeliers, curving balconies, and decorative carpeting.

ON BROADWAY

“The Broadway theaters we go to are historical. This isn’t your local performing arts center or even your metropolitan performing arts center with thousands of seats. These theaters date from one hundred years ago. The seats are smaller, because the people were smaller back then. Even the stages are tiny. When you’re there, you see the world’s most talented performers doing a kind of theater that’s native to America. Musicals are meant to be accessible, so they sing in English, in a way that you can hear the words. It’s not like opera and it’s not like a regular play—it’s a sort of hybrid, and it has a style all its own.”
