ON BROADWAY

The Broadway theaters we go to are historical. This isn't your local performing arts center or even your metropolitan performing arts center with thousands of seats. These theaters date from a hundred years ago. The seats are smaller, because the people were smaller back then. Even the stages are tiny. When you're there, you see the world's most talented performers doing a kind of theater that's native to America. Musicals are meant to be accessible, so they sing in English, in a way that you can hear the words. It's not like opera and it's not like a regular play—it's a sort of hybrid, and it has a style all its own.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART

The Met may have the word “art” in its name, but it is much more than just art. As the largest museum in the Western Hemisphere, it exhibits objects, artifacts, and crafts from all over the globe. You can see everything from Egyptian mummies and sarcophagi, to a reconstructed Greek temple, to medieval weapons and suits of armor. And of course, it houses one of the world’s greatest art collections—everything from the European masters to stunning examples of Islamic and African art.

CENTRAL PARK

Central Park is not your ordinary city park. It is 843 acres of trees, paths, man-made lakes, bridges, woods, and, of course, people. The park was designed in the mid-1800s by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux for a design competition to create a large green space in the middle of Manhattan where people could relax, unwind, and get back in touch with nature, even if just for an afternoon. These days, when the sun is shining, New Yorkers and tourists flock to Central Park to picnic, skate, stroll, toss frisbees, paddle in the lake, or just relax and watch the people go by.
