The 8 points of retraction

How do you prefer your surgical site to look?

Order from: order@junemedical.com

The problems

After observing 100's of hours of surgeries, we started to notice some very common, reoccurring problems facing surgeons and medical staff.

Loose parts

Loose parts are always a major issue in any surgical environment. They heighten the risk and increase unnecessary work for staff.

Poor construction

Old screw mechanisms led to retractors not tightening enough, while over-tightening caused screws to break and fall off.

Bad quality

Many of the models on today's current market are very poorly constructed and do not have the required certification.

Outdated design

Although revolutionary 15 years ago, in todays medical environment they are outdated, clunky and invasive.

Too expensive

Even though these models have not changed in over a decade, they remain very expensive. Design, materials and manufacturing processes have improved dramatically, and associated costs can be reduced.

The Galaxy II provides 8 points of retraction, while I only have two hands!"

The solutions

When you introduce the Galaxy II, those identified common problems become things of the past. The Galaxy II provides clear visualization, optimal exposure and access to the operative area during surgical procedures. The first generation Galaxy, invented in 2016, assisted many surgical procedures, but we knew there was room for improvement.

So we attended several hours of surgery, asked lots of questions and collated a multitude of feedback.

The result is the award winning Galaxy II.

Cam locks

Intuitive to use, the surgeon inspired CAM locking system enables users to swiftly adapt the retractor to the needs of the procedure with one single hand.

Lightweight

The cored out frame is made of a strong material, and is still 10% lighter than it's predecessor.

Precise design

The slots on the ring easily secure the stays in place, but readily release when rapid reposition is required. The low profile allows superior access to the operative sites.

Less plastic

Better for the environment!

Better for staff

Galaxy can reduce work related injuries (musculoskeletal disorders – MSD) by replacing manual retraction and by reducing sharps injuries with our new atraumatic semi blunt hooks (JUNE3002sb)
