As a global company, Halliburton believes that public policy and legislation can and do have a significant impact on our success. We keep informed on significant domestic and foreign policy issues that affect our Company and our employees around the world through meetings with public officials and policymakers. Halliburton conducts meetings in compliance with all applicable laws and regulations and the Company does not use corporate funds to make political contributions to any political parties or candidates.

Halliburton participates in public policy discussions through our membership in trade and business associations. These organizations engage in legislative activity regarding matters that affect all or a subset of its members. We believe our employees should take an active interest in fostering principles of good government in the countries, states, and communities in which we live. While Halliburton employees may spend their own time and funds as private citizens to support the political causes of their choice, they are not allowed to conduct these activities when on the job or on Halliburton property. Additionally, employees are prohibited from using the Company's name, funds, or assets to support or promote any political candidates, parties, or committees.

The Company's political activities and lobbying are consistent with our business objectives and public policy positions, and these activities are not predicated on the personal views on the Company's management, employees, or board of directors.

Employee training on compliance with the Halliburton policies regarding political activities and lobbying is covered as part of required Code of Business Conduct (COBC) training every two years.

Board Oversight of Political Engagement

The Halliburton Board of Directors Nominating & Corporate Governance Committee is responsible for the overall corporate strategy for political engagement. In providing oversight for political engagement, the Nominating & Corporate Governance Committee reviews and approves political expenditures, payments to trade associations, and lobbying activities of the Company. Our directors have a range of skills and backgrounds relevant to the responsibility of overseeing our corporate political engagement, including business leadership, energy industry expertise, and experience with a range of different regulatory backdrops. In overseeing Halliburton's political engagement, the Board and its Committees are updated on trends in regional regulatory and political environments, including matters relating to our industry such as the dynamic geopolitical backdrop of the energy business, as well sustainability concerns.

Corporate Political Contributions

Halliburton does not make contributions to political candidates or political parties. The Company's corporate political participation (including contributions of funds or use of facilities and resources) complies with all applicable laws. Link to HAL corporate policy - 02270

HALPAC Contributions

The Halliburton Company Political Action Committee (HALPAC) was established in the United States as a means for our U.S. employees, through their voluntary contributions, to support candidates whose views on matters affecting the industry represent the best interests of Halliburton and its employees. HALPAC is a multi-candidate, non-partisan political action committee, and the HALPAC board uses a variety of criteria to evaluate a candidate's eligibility for support. This criteria includes the candidate's record on business-related issues, the leadership and committee assignments for which the candidate might be eligible, and the extent of Halliburton facilities and employees within the candidate's district and state. Halliburton meets with public officials and policy makers on important matters to our business, customers, employees, and other stakeholders. Link to HALPAC annual report
