For its fifth fabric collection with Kravet, the Museum of New Mexico tells the story of its unique place as a crossroads of international trade and culture through fabrics inspired by the Museum's renowned textile, basketry and ceramic collections.

Inspiration for these modern interpretations of traditional designs was drawn primarily from small-scale patterns and embroideries in the 25,000-piece textile and dress collection at the Museum of International Folk Art. Iconic Native American textiles and ceramics from the Museum of Indian Arts & Culture also influenced many of the collection's designs. These museums comprise two of the Museum of New Mexico's four cultural institutions.

Color and texture inspirations came from diverse mediums such as pottery, basketry, textiles and cut paper patterns, resulting in rich textures and pops of vivid colors that mimic the crisp blue sky, the red earth and an array of the complementary hues, both hot and cool, so often identified with the beautiful Santa Fe landscape. This eclectic ensemble of textiles embodies this creative approach to living – collected, worldly and modern.
